ALLEGED WILL OF QUEEN HAS MANY ANGLES

Attorneys Hold Series of Conferences; Name of 'Princess' Theresa Comes Into Rumors Concerning Manner in Which Document Was Conveyed to Lawyer; Crown Jewels Now Held in Trust Company's Vaults

Two new developments came this afternoon in the pending litigation over Queen Liliuokalani's estate. The first was an announcement by an attorney for Prince Kuhio that the delegate would undoubtedly contest the purported will of August 29, 1917. "We claim that the queen had been incapacitated for the last nine years," said the attorney.

The second was the expression of a non-judicial opinion by Circuit Judge William H. Heen that a bond of $30,000 would be sufficient surety to cover the removal of certain crown jewels from the vaults of the Bishop Trust Co., which are wanted at the queen's funeral. It was announced that arrangements for the removal would probably be completed this afternoon. It is expected that the bond will be furnished by someone acting for Colonel Curtis P. Iaukea, who has general charge of the funeral.

An attorney said this afternoon that the crown jewels, while they are real diamonds, are of a mediocre quality and probably not worth more than $15,000.

Sensational in its suddenness, news early yesterday that Queen Liliuokalani had left a hitherto-unknown will has proved to be the most discussed event following on the death of the queen at 8:30 yesterday morning. Today events in connection with this document, declared by some to be genuine and by others scouted either as false or else made when she did not realize her actions, are hurrying fast one upon the other.

Rumors that John F. Colburn, former treasurer of the Kapiolani estate, and 'Princess' Theresa Wilcox Bellevue knew of the existence of the will are denied in part and in part said to be exaggerations.

One story is that the "princess" was the agency which secured the will piece-meal and took it to Attorney Andrews for moulding into proper shape. Attorney Andrews declined to say this morning exactly how his knowledge of the alleged intention of the queen to make the will came to him, and the "princess," while admitting some knowledge of the affair, would not say exactly what her activities and functions have been.

Here are the outstanding features to date:

The signed copy of the purported last will of Queen Liliuokalani reached Attorney Lorin Andrews early in September, having been signed on August 29.

Upon the death of the queen Sunday, Attorney Andrews, who had drawn the will for Liliuokalani, immediately notified Col. Curtis P. Iaukea, Trustee William O. Smith and Delegate Kuhio of its existence, which had hitherto been kept secret.

Attorney Andrews also telephoned to John F. Colburn, stating that the will designated him as executor of the estate. Attorney William B. Lymer on Sunday morning became associated with Attorney Andrews as one of counsel for Colburn.

Colburn's attorneys issue statement that he made no attempt to take complete charge of the queen's funeral, nor did he suggest this to Colonel Iaukea and others.

Officers and Men Get Down to Work With Military Precision and Energy

(By a Star-Bulletin Staff Correspondent.) CAMP LILIUOKALANI, Kawaiahae, Nov. 12.—"This encampment is the best in the history of Hawaii's National Guard, said Brig.-Gen. Samuel I. Johnson yesterday afternoon as he marched past the company quarters, where men were building a city out of tents and stakes at Kawaiahae, near Haleiwa. "If other sections of America had responded as did Hawaii the United States would now have millions of men in training."

A first glimpse of the field where the National Guard will be encamped for a week reminded one of a city swept by a tornado. Scattered in lanes throughout the plains were tents, stakes, rifles and every conceivable thing that is necessary around a military camp.

Then as if by magic hundreds of men fell in line and it seemed but a minute until the field was dotted with tents arranged in true military manner. When the 1st Infantry arrived
